Borrisoleigh

Borrisoleigh is a small market town which is situated on the R498, 16km from Thurles and 24km from Nenagh. It boasts Georgian architecture and some traditional shop fronts. Situated on McDonagh Square is the Sacred Heart Church, which was built by architect Walter Doolin and local builder Thomas Williams. The cream sandstone of the window and door surrounds was quarried at Drombane, 19km away, as was that used in Cormac's Chapel on the famous Rock of Cashel.

Two local missionary bishops, Joseph Shanahan (1871-1943) and Thomas Quinlan (1896-1970) are commemorated inside. A replica of the 1,300 year old St. Cualan's Bell is also on display. The original was sold to a British Museum by its finder 200 years ago. Another lovely old church can be found in Ileigh. Its foundation stone was laid in 1826. The church has always been simply known as "Ileigh Church". It was built in the style known as a "Barn Church" - there are no windows on one side of the main aisle. Borrisoleigh is also home to the remains of a 15th century tower house - a de Burgo fortress. This can be viewed from the Templemore Road.

Many sons of the area have donned county colours and hurled with enthusiasm and many All-Ireland medals have been brought home to the parish. There is also a great tradition of greyhound rearing and racing in Borrisoleigh. Every year on St. Stephen's Day the renowned Coursing takes place in the parish. Many famous winning greyhounds have come from Borrisoleigh.

The parish is also home to the famous Tipperary Mineral Water and Soft Drinks Plant. Tipperary Mineral Water is recognised far and wide. As of today, Borrisoleigh is an expanding and busy town which has seen major housing and industrial development in recent years.

Borrisoleigh Development Association

The inspiration for this book came about as a result of a very successful Photographic Exhibition which was held in our Local Oratory in November 1997, to celebrate the Fair of Borris.

The vast number of interesting photographs displayed at this time were enjoyed and appreciated by all. They brought back many memories and thoughts of days gone by. It was decided that a collection of this material would preserve the Faces and Places of Borrisoleigh and lleigh and so the task began...

A special feature included in this publication is a photograph of every pupil attending our three primary schools in 2004/2005.

It is my hope that this book will give great enjoyment and delight to those who are living in the parish at present and to our future generations. Let's hope this collection will travel to all corners of the world where it will rekindle homely thoughts for all.

*"Just because the tale has been told,
It doesn't mean the story has ended."*

Foreword

They say that the way to cure homesickness is to go home. And when you can't go home, or can't go back, the mind's eye takes you there. Books like Faces and Places painstakingly assembled and scrupulously documented, make the journey both amusing and sad.

A hundred times a day, images from the past and from home shoot up from the memory, recalling a special time and place. Maybe it's a mental picture of John Delaney from Rathmoy singing in his wonderful tenor voice on his way to the creamery with tanks of milk on the horse-drawn car, or Nellie Patterson gathering a bunch of flowers in the ditch, as we traipsed home from school. Or what about Willie Burke throwing the tea leaves out the front door of his house, on Lower Street! (I'm sure the EU has passed a law against it since). Or a sow devouring a box of oranges, outside Biddy Patterson's shop, on her way to a romantic interlude at Dwan's of Ballyroan!

Or Jimmy Chadwick's Tiger Moth aeroplane putt-putting over the tree-tops on a summer's evening, after taking off from Cooke's demesne. Or the beautiful and mysterious Children of Mary, in lace veils and blue dresses, kneeling at the top of the Sacred Heart Church, in the dim light during the annual Forty Hours. (It was always held on the weekend of the Football All-Ireland, distressingly close to the onset of winter). Or the light coming through the stain glass windows, one by Harry Clarke, in the Church. Or our early forays into Irish dancing in the Marian Hall with Mr. Nolan for two shillings a class. Or us as children swimming in the river under a mighty dam of sandbags. Or Sean Kenny, great hurler and wit, in a tweed jacket standing in The Square. Or Josie Devaney, in elegant fur and gold drop earrings, outside her house opposite the Park... Or Mick Prior and Peadar Cummins hurling with the Juveniles... Sometimes you wonder did you dream it all!

This marvellous book shows smiling faces, but signals too that life was not always a bed of roses for the people of Borrisoleigh and its hinterland. There are pictures from harsh times, when the State provided little or no help. The Church provided solace and education, but led more with stick than carrot. Parents parted with their emigrating children. Where there was no property to inherit, opportunity was extremely limited.

The signs of struggle are in the faces in this book, when lives were lived out in hardship and families heroically survived grinding poverty. Patriarchal times are glimpsed in these pages, austere times for women in particular.

In these pages are shades of the Brehon Laws too. The Celtic customs of former 'clan life' are evident in some of the pictures, when the land was often tilled, sowed, and reaped with the assistance of neighbours. And produce was divided.

This is a pictorial guidebook to Borrisoleigh's history, both distant and recent. It is a catalogue of the people and their own place and time. It is not just a book for anyone interested in Borrisoleigh, Co Tipperary.

It is not just a mere collection of pictures of young, middle-aged and older people. It is a visual record of the profound changes that have occurred in over 100 years of history in Ireland.

The book does not just remind us of the actual people in the photographs. It also evokes memories of other people altogether, of events, of phrases and sayings, of clips of lost conversations, of scenes long forgotten. The picture at the Fountain from over 30 years ago reminds me of a story of unrequited love in Borrisoleigh, where the heartsore man placed his head under the gushing waters and declared “cooling waters quench the ardour of my burning love”. Borrisoleigh always had that romantic undercurrent.

There are images of children on the frozen pond in Cooke's by the Pallas Road. That was a safer world when children could roam freely. When we were young, we crossed over the river from Rathmoy and into Cooke's like brigands to explore the Fort and slide in our wellingtons across that great pond, the Lough of Garrane. Global warming seems to have put a stop to that activity, and stories of driving tractors across the lake in the black of winter are just legend now.

To Father Michael Barry and committee chairman, Jimmy Stapleton, and all those who put this book together, we must give thanks. The toil that goes into collecting a volume of photographs such as this, finding captions and ensuring they are correct, is gruelling and protracted. In giving us Faces and Places, they have given Borrisoleigh a record of historical and contemporary life. It is a fine and enduring gift.

It is a book that needs to be perused at leisure. For those of us who still suffer regular bouts of nostalgia for home, it takes us back to the wonderful magical times we spent in Borrisoleigh, the centre of our universe.

Fair Borrisoleigh

(by Pat Mahon)

*There's a neat little town that stands in a vale, in the midst of green mountains, valleys and dale,
on a sweet sparkling river that's lovely to see,
'tis the home of my childhood fair Borrisoleigh.*

*The meadows all round are lovely and grand,
covered o'er with wild flowers from nature's own hand,
the green mantled hillsides would delight you to see oh rare are thine equals fair Borrisoleigh.*

*There's its beautiful church with its stately cross crown, that sign of redemption high over the town,
it's as beauteous a building as any might be,
and it stands in thy centre fair Borrisoleigh.*

*There's the ancient old castle that stands by the stream, where the warrior fought and the bard sang his theme,
with its ivy crowned turrets it stands majestically, looking silently over fair Borrisoleigh.*

*Dearest home of my childhood, loved place of my birth, you're the fairest, the sweetest, the loveliest on earth,
if ever I wander, where'ere it might be,
I will never forget you fair Borrisoleigh,
I will never forget you fair Borrisoleigh.*
